Below is an example of an SGO set by an elementary special education teacher who teaches students with disabilities in pull-out replacement Language Arts classes. Baseline data collected at the beginning of the year indicated that the teacher's students needed to focus on reading fluency.

Evaluation of Special Education Teachers

In an inclusion class, a specific SGO could be geared to special education or ELL students. It might also address the needs of a group of students struggling with some piece of the content, students who came without prerequisite skills, or more advanced students. An SGO might also be written around specific course content or skills.

This SGO is not focused on a content standard, but rather a practice standard. It aligns with MP4 from the CCSS (Model with mathematics). Since this is a process standard, the assessments associated with this SGO do not follow the traditional format; instead, the assessments (diagnostic, formative, interim, and summative) used resemble performance tasks which assess student proficiency in the ...
